

Surpassing Humanity – Daniel Kay

Rulers of the jungle, the wilderness our home, exuding hope and love sprinkling joy on the ordinariness of the daylight and night.
Men, in their ignorance won't leave us alone on the meadow, barnyard and woods, can't find a safe home.

Strong together when we hunt for survival, men and their guns are our only rivals.
We're the fearless predators yet being hunted for fun, food, fashion, their selfish needs find no ends.

They take what they like and still crave more and more to the point where not many left of our kind anymore.
I wish it satisfies their hunger knowing this,
I wish they could feel the pain that we feel,

Big or small protection is needed for all.
Can't defend myself or speak in a way that you understand but maybe you could just communicate in a language that we both can comprehend.

Let your love
be equal to mine, it may help you to decipher a substantial meaning for these lines.
